

Personal Recollections of the Great Rebellion by a Man on the Inside.

BY A NATIVE VIRGINIAN.

Copyright, 1899, by the Publishers of THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE.

About Jan. 1, 1864, I went from Portsmouth to Winchester, where I hoped to hear from my friends in Virginia. Armed with a letter of recommendation from Chancellor L. C. C. Cooper, then Lieutenant-Governor of "Restored Virginia," I started for Winchester by the way of Harper's Ferry, and arriving at Stephens Depot, within five miles of Winchester, I presented the Lieutenant-Governor's letter to Col. Stephenson, commanding the post, who was well received, and was given a pass-port to Winchester.

I may add that Col. Stephenson inquired about his brother, who resided in Staunton, asking his position, etc. I was glad to be able to inform him in regard to his brother, having made his acquaintance while in Staunton. He was a Magistrate, and owned property in Staunton; went with the Confederates, it is understood, but took no active part in the war.

BACK TO WINCHESTER. The same day I proceeded to Winchester, five miles away, in company with some lines. I walked about between the storehouse and the fortifications as calm as a Summer's morn, and I even laughed at the very idea of the possible capture of my own cousin, Capt. John Clarke, Quartermaster of the 24th N. C.

This regiment had been commanded by Col. Riddick, who had married my own cousin, Texanna Clarke, and sister of "Capt. John." Lieut. Riddick had graduated at West Point some half-dozen years before the war, and went with the Confederates, who made him a Colonel, as mentioned above. He was killed, I believe, at a battle of the Wilderness, or near by; a shell, exploding in front of his horse, tore him and his horse to atoms, not even any remains being found. We forwarded, or assisted in having it done, his servant and remaining horse to Raleigh, N. C., where his widow resided.

Longstreet, doubtless, hearing of our strong position and reinforcements, rapidly withdrew towards Petersburg, gathering up all the bacon and apple brandy in being charged with assaulting one Lynn, an editor of the town. We had no troops then, but I saw by Jupiter, Jove and Mars that the Acting Mayor—Keyser—must produce him, Mayor Trout having skipped or swam out of the way.

Taylor was produced in an hour at the Mayor's office, and I appeared by consent of the Acting Mayor as his attorney, and both he and the editor gave bond of $150 to keep the peace.

I also remember that Maj. Harmon, Stoneval Jackson's Commissary, appeared at the office, charged by a freedman with refusing to pay him for labor done, and driving him off his farm near Staunton when he asked for payment. Harmon put on airs, and got saucy, when he came in with an editor of the town, but was taken down speedily, and, I believe, paid up. The Major was a "dead cock in the pit" those times.

I further remember that a merchant, being summoned to answer a claim preferred by a "friend and brother," refused to appear, and when notified that the case would go against him by default if he did not appear, he still remained away, and we decided that he owed the colored "gentleman," honestly, "17 "good" dollars, which amount he paid promptly on my presenting the bill and announcing the decision of the court; but uttered not a word, sigh, or groan during the payment. I was amused, and wanted to ask him if he had been struck dumb by the action of the "august" court, or if he was too full for utterance; which latter condition might have been the reason, as whisky was then awfully cheap.

Resigning from the Bureau in the Fall of Lick of their coming. He determined to teach them a lesson. His son Sam had been killed in the battle of Gettysburg, within easy range of his house, and awaited their coming.

They came, and approached the house from the road in front of the house, and inquired of Mrs. Todd, who stood in the door, if Mr. Todd was at home. She replied, "He is not here, mostly you wish to see him again." They, with much laughter, said they were not much afraid. Mr. Todd, rising from behind the rocks, said in a loud and angry tone: "You want Jimmy Todd, here he is!" Several of the guards fired in the direction of the voice, then all were still for a while only, then a sharp crack from the rocks at the front guard—shot dead through the heart.

Then another volley from the guard; then a shot from the rocks, and another shot tumbled from his saddle. That shot was from Sam; and Sam would have got him but for him dodging behind the gate-post.

The guards were now totally demoralized. They took cover in a hurry. Mr. Todd then told me that he had killed one of the guards, and got out of the Lick, if they wanted to live. The guard took the hint, and, unappreciated, in the house, he was wounded, and reported to Capt. Avel, that they were overwhelmed by Uncle Jimmy, his son, and some 20 Swamp Dragoons. I have never seen him since.

I read this statement in the Staunton papers, which was entirely false as to the Swamp Dragoons. Capt. Avel and his men were never in the neighborhood, and Uncle Jimmy would be driven out and his house destroyed; and Uncle Jimmy sent him a message, saying that if he would make such a revenge as would even make "Lucifer's angels shudder."

The grand old hunter was never after him, and the fact was that Uncle Jimmy was strongly intrenched, of unflinching courage, as also was Sam, and was known by all, as "dead shot." There ever was one. In fact, it was understood that if he aimed at a man, his enemy, the man was as good as dead and buried. He was a "banker" for a scrimmage with him. (To be continued.)
